Old warps and ropes chopped up and thrown upon the boiler took deck-bones and deck coal bunkers were converted into fuel, also the booms and girders but still the ship could hardly hold her ground. The captain gave orders to free the ship from the lumber which was burning fires with the rapped forming her cargo. The costliest fuel, but it answered better than substitutes for coal, and by this means the ship brought on Thursday into the Harbor, where she arrived at 10 o'clock.
